PUBLISHERS AND PROPRIETORS.

PRIDAY MORNING, NOVEMBER 5.

A Disgrantled Brother,

The Bellaire Democrat, an intensely

Bourbon sheet, is down on the Register for admitting a Democratic defeat this year on the first morning after the election, instead of keeping a rooster or two in the paper for a week and breaking the news quietly and gradually to the Democracy. Its fling at the Register is very refreshing -so much so that we copy it, as follows:

-so much so that we copy it, as follows:

Those Republican "pencil slingers," who are hired about Democratic daily newspapers to teach and berate Democrats, take great pride in heading election defeats of the Democracy with the word "scooped." We would say to the proprietors of these Democratic dailies who hire these Reputlican "pencil slingers" to berate and teach Democrats, that the Democratic party can never "fade out"—that it will live long after these proprietors and Republican "pencil slingers" have "passed in their checks."

The Register can see in the above some in

The Register can see in the above some of the effects of its past course-of having educated the democracy to expect poultry in its columns under all circumstances after an election. The reformation this year was too sudden, and brother Allen was let down so hard that it jarred him fundamentally. He expected a pad of some sort underneath, and the fact that he was let down on to a very hard, cold and rough stone jammed and hurt him so badly that he is in a very resentful mood

We are constantly being told by a cer tain class of writers, usually of pessimistic tendencies, that as inventions multiply, use, the condition of the wage-receivers deteriorates, the cost of living increases and wages decrease. Such statements are usually without statistical backing, being merely the utterances of parties making them, and entirely from an individual point of observation. They are prompted. by a few extreme cases, which are considered as illustrations. From one case, they feel justified in drawing conclusions applicable to the whole subject of the effect of mechanical devices.

made by Americans, they are seized upon by writers abroad who desire a change in our industrial policy, and who use them to pacify discontented operatives at home. A case in point. The Manchester (Eng-six in seeing only the dark side of things. I and) Guardian, in a recent editorial, uses the following language: "The deterioration which has taken place within the past twenty years in the condition of the factory operatives of the United States is described by a writer in the October number of the Adiantic Monthly. Taking a typical New England village, whose inhabitants are mainly occupied in spinning and weaving cotton, he gives a minute account of the social and economical state of the working people, which in nearly every respect appears to be much worse than that of the factory population of this country."

The statements of the American writer upon which the editor of the Manchester Guardian bases the conclusions quoted, are that, "Years ago, previous to the panic and the French emigration, reasonably good wages were paid in the factories, and the native Americans, Irish, English and companies to the second is a self-icent number of applicants, soit-able or unsuitable, for the force required. But even during hard times the number of applicants sait-applied in a fact, in many such centers there were not a sufficient number of applicants, sait-applied in the factories, and the precision of the special of the depression? It would puzzle them to-day to state the cause of the death of the depression. During the recent census it was almost impossible in manufacturing centers to secure suitable men for enumerators. In fact, in many such centers there were not a sufficient number of applicants, soit-applied the procession of the special of the secure of the death of the depression. During the recent census it was almost impossible in manufacturing centers of secure suitable men for enumerators. In fact, in many such centers there were not a sufficient number of applicants, soit-applied the such as th land) Guardian, in a recent editorial, uses the native Americane, Irish, English and Scotch, who then constituted the population, lived comfortably; and some of perfected more and more, and in many places where a workman was required, an automatic attachment now does the work. Laborers by these agencies being more plentiful, and the demand for them being relatively less, the natural consequence is small weges, and as these causes bid fair to continue, no change in an upward direction can occur."

We submit that hardly one of these statements is susceptible of proof; on the contrary, we maintain and can readily show, let, that there is only apparent deterioration; 2d, that the work of the individual operative has been decreased, and his pay increased; 3d, that the cost of living has not increaved as rapidly as wages; 4th, that laborers are more plentiful than formerly, and that the demand for them is greater instead of less; and, 5th, that a change in an unward direction can occur. Trequires but the most superficial consideration to understand that ferty years sign the milis in this country were filled with English and American operatives of a nigh grade of intelligence. The American girls came from our farming districts, and were the daughters, in many instances, of the beat citizens. As machinery was improved the Irish came in, and former operatives skepped out, but did not thereby deteriorate, on the contrary, the Irish girl stepped up in the grade of melligence. The American operatives skepped out, but did not thereby deteriorate, on the contrary, the Irish girl stepped up in the grade of melligence. The American operatives skepped out, but did not thereby deteriorate, on the contrary, the Irish girl stepped up in the grade of melligence. The American operatives as dependent of the service of the processes of manufacture, the French Canadian poprative has been able to take as atep in advance of his old condition. And so it will always be, as one grade of intelligence progresses, the vacated position must be filled by the lower grade, and this process.

Belief to grade of the contral to the latter has not deteriorated thereby, the contract of the contract of the cont related to growth should never be mistaken for that incident to imbeelility and abuse.

English and American statistics, from anthoritative sources, establish the truth of the proposition that the work of the individual has been decreased and his pay increased. In 1840 the hours of labor for the operatives in cotton mills in England were sixty-nine per week; in 1860 they had been reduced to sixty, and 1878 to fifty-six and one-half—in all, from 1840 to 1878, a reduction of twelve and one-half hours per week, while the wages had been in most instances increased. The same was true as to skilled trades, and during the same period the average cost of living was reduced from 34s, per week to 32s.

The facts relative to our own country

The facts relative

are of greater importance, and we present

proves beyond the possibility of argument that working time has decreased and wages have increased contemporaneously with mechanical improvements.

The cost of living is essential in the consideration of wages, and we therefore introduce the following table of the average cost of the leading articles of subalstence in New England for 1840, 1860 and 1878.

When the cost of all the items which enter into the subsistence of a family are consolidated and averaged, it has been officially shown (see Tenth Annual Report Masseachieste Bureau of Statistics) that, in 1845, as compared with 1860, groceries advanced in price 7 per cent, provisions 28 per cent, fuel 5 per cent, dry goods declined 0 per cent, rents advanced 25 per cent, and boots 18 per cent, and for all these items of expense the average was 14 per cent higher in 1878 than in 1860.

The consolidation of average weekly wages proved that, on a gold basis, they were 244 per cent higher in 1878 than in 1860, a clear advantage of 10 per cent over the cost of living, while the working time had been reduced 10 per cent.

These statements cannot be controverted, and they positively destroy the value When the cost of all the items which

The claim of the pessimist that laborers are more plentiful now and the demand for them less than formarly, is equally unfounded. History will set us right on this place of the conclusions of men who per-sist in seeing only the dark side of things. What to do with the unemployed is an old of employed is far less than is generally of employed is har less than is generally supposed. Some two years ago, one of the leading citizens of a New England manufacturing city, of about 40,000 inhabitants, informed us that there were at least 3,000 men out of em-manded Mr. Spoopendyke. "What are ye thinking with, your elbows? If Mr. Garfield dûn't send it, how could Morey get it? Spose he went fishing and caught it like an eel?"

"That's the point," conceded Mrs. Spoopendyke. "But if Mr. Morey did get it, who sent it? He must have got it, because it was directed to him."

"That settles it, "groaned Mr. Spoopendyke. "Nobody thought of that before. You've got the whole postal system in a tesspoon. If somebody would fit you up with pigeonholes and an iron safe you'd only need to be assessed ten per cent by a campaign committee to be a postoffice. If Mr. Garfield never sent that letter, of course Morey never got it. Ain't that plain? If he did get it, then the chances are that Mr. Garfield wrote it. Cam'ye see that?"

"That's just what I said. Now, if Mr. Morey didn't get it, how did the newsparages are sent bold of "? Ilid Mr. Garfield or get a lower of the see that of the

"That's just what I said. Now, if Mr. Morey didn't get it, how did the newspapers get hold of it? Did Mr. Garfield send it to the newspaper?"

"Oh! didn't he?" howled Mr. Spoopen-dyke. "He took it around himself, and sprained his leg in doing it. Oh! you've struck it. It took your logic to fetch out the factà. With your metaphysics you only want a red and green light to be a drug store. The Republicans say that Garilad didn't write it or send it, and the factà. With your metaphysacs yonly want a red and green light to be drug store. The Republicans say the Gardeld didn't write it or sand it. Morey never got it or saw it. Can you that through your head? Is there rod in your skull for that idea?"
"Plenty." rejoined Mrs. Spoopendy. "But don't the Democrats say that? Gardeld did write it and Mr. Morey of They may know as much ab

"But don't the Democrats say that Mr. Garfield did write it and Mr. Morey did get it? They may know as much about it as the Republicans, and then they've got the letter to prove it. If they didn't have the letter it would be different, and it shows that it went to Mr. Morey. Now, the only thing is whether Mr. Morey was a Democrat or Republican. If he was—" "Are ye an idiot? Have ye got to go to night school to be a fool? Don't you know Morey's dead? He ain't Republican, or Democrat either; he's an angel, if he's had luck. He left that letter among his papers, and his wife gave it out for publication." "Then that ends it," said Mrs. Spoopendyke. "If his wife gave it out, I know he hever got it. That's just the way with some women. Always gotting ther poor dead husbands in trouble. She ought to be selamed. And so Mr. Garfield ain't to be President?"

"Do you know what you want? You want a high chinney and a gravel walk to be a lunatic asylum. Who says he won't be President? Why can't he be President?"

"If he didn't write the letter how can he?" argued Mrs. Spoopendyke.
"What do you suppose the letter was, a

he?" argued Mrs. Spoopendyke.
"What do you suppose the letter was, a measly flower pot? Think it was a shot tower? What d'ye s'pose it was, anyit? Wasn't it something about his nomination?"

No, it wasn't it!" eneered Mr. Spoopendyke. "It was a confession that he was old man Bender. That's what it was. It laid the blame of knocking Nathan's brains out with Charley Rose on George Washington—that's what it was. Got it now? Think you can talk about it like a human being another time?" and Mr. Spoopendykeshot out of the house.
"Well, well," said Mrs. Spookendyke, as ehe held the bed spread up and figured on whether she would turn it over or have it washed. "I'm glad I'm beginning to understand politics. But if Mr. Garfield didn't write the letter and Mr. Morey was alive, it would go hard for Mrs. Morey careful about what she does in politics, and having decided to turn the spreac Mrs. Spoopendyke tied a towel around he head, and having dusted her husband's human being could Bribery in English Election

It is quite possible that so soon after the election Americans may not be in a condiion to moralize on the bribery and corruption employed in English elections that the Macclesfield Commission invest gating cases of bribery in the last Parlia mentary election found that of the 5,634 persons who voted in that borough, over our thousand were bribed. The price of s vote during the morning was six shill ings, say one dollar and a half, but it "advanced to a sovereign" as the day went on.

Now, bad as we may be in this country, it may be said with certainty there is no election district in any cities where such a large proportion of voters, or anything within cannon shot of it, can be bought for money at so much a head. There is a great deal of trading, sales of votes for offices or promises of appointments, &c., and there is repeating and ballot box stuffing and false counting, but the great mass of American voters, even of those who wink vanced to a sovereign" as the day went on.
